Silvia Curbelo’s Newest Release
“Silvia Curbelo’s poetry is accomplished, daring, full of energy and intelligence; it is the generous manifestation of an authentic and original gift.”
~ W. S. Merwin

“With a knack for disguising wisdom as plain-spoken observation, Curbelo’s poems are infused with insight the way sunlight fills a quiet room. The lyric voice is rarely this accessible, this unwavering, this pure.”
~ Campbell McGrath

Dear Poets:

There is maybe a feeling that we have returned to 1968, mixed with a bit of 1919. I hope and trust the year will not finish its second half as we have endured its first. I prefer to hope for unity, for health, and as poets, as we read and speak and write, that we can look toward October, to our next live gathering, and to see then where we are. We are preparing for that, just as we diligently prepared for April. We are looking to the light of that fellowship, that weekend of celebration and of learning, and we are sparing nothing, nothing, to deliver the best event in our history. The best speakers, the best locale, the best hope we can muster for the future.

When I was a kid, I would marvel at a mound of ants, how a seven-year old could brush it aside thoughtlessly enough, yet could see, immediately, the coming of order again, the endurance, the purpose, the correction, the creation. We are no different. As poets, we are just samely different, we are bonded individuals, creating from what is uncreated. Take away our ability to meet, we make up a bunch of digital boxes, Hollywood Squares of poetic exchange. That has occurred all over Florida, in Orlando, Miami, Tallahassee, and many smaller cities and towns in between. Easy really, because the town becomes the city, the city the state, the state, a nation.

We will walk the line on all of this. All of it. And we will be better. I wish you all understanding, a sense of things, a sensitivity for things, and for deliverance. The summer will heal, and the fall will shine. And whatever can’t be said in poems, awaits in prayer.

See you soon, my sweetest friends.

ONE AFTERNOON WHEN BARBIE WANTED TO JOIN THE MILITARY

It was a crazy idea, she admits now, but camouflage was one costume she still hadn’t tried. Barbie’d gone mod with Go-go boots during Vietnam. Throughout Panama she was busy playing with a Frisbee the size of a Coke bottle cap. And while troops were fighting in the Gulf, she wore a gown inspired by Ivana Trump. When Mattel told her, hell no—she couldn’t go, Barbie borrowed GI Joe’s fatigues, safety pinning his pants’ big waist to better fit her own. She settled in his olive tank. But Barbie thought it was boring. “Why don’t you try running over something small?” coaxed GI Joe, who sat naked behind the leg of a human’s living room chair. Barbie saw imaginary bunnies hopping through the shag carpet. “I can’t,” she said. GI Joe suggested she gun down the enemy who was sneaking up behind her. Barbie couldn’t muster up the rage for killing, even if it were only play. Maybe if someone tried to take her parking space or scratched her red Trans Am. Maybe if someone had called her a derogatory name. But what had this soldier from the other side done? GI Joe, seeing their plan was a mistake, asked her to return his clothes, making Barbie promise not to tell anyone. As she slipped back into her classic baby blue one-piece swimsuit, she realized this would be her second secret. She couldn’t tell about the time she posed nude for Hustler.

A young photographer who lived in the house dipped her legs in a full bottle of Johnson’s Baby Oil,
then swabbed some more on her torso.
Barbie lounged on the red satin lining of the kid’s Sunday jacket. He dimmed the lights and lit a candle
to create a glossy centerfold mood.
“Lick your lips,” he kept saying,
forgetting Barbie didn’t have a tongue.
She couldn’t pout. She couldn’t even bite
the maraschino cherry he dangled in front of her mouth.
Luckily there was no film in his sister’s camera,
so the boy’s pictures never came out.
Luckily GI Joe wasn’t in the real Army or he said he would risk being court-martialed—
he wasn’t supposed to lend his uniform
to anyone, especially a girl.
Just then a human hand deposited Ken from the sky.
Somewhere along the way he’d lost his sandals.
“What have you two been up to?” he asked.
Barbie didn’t have the kind of eyes that could shift away
so she lost herself in the memory of a joke
made by her favorite comedian Sandra Bernhard
who said she liked her dates to be androgynous
because if she were going to be with a man
she didn’t want to have to face that fact.
Barbie was grateful for Ken’s plastic flatfeet and plastic flat crotch. No military would ever take him, even if there were a draft.
As GI Joe bullied Ken into a headlock, Barbie told the boys to cut it out. She threatened that if he kept it up, GI Joe would never get that honorable discharge.

~ Denise Duhamel
from Queen for a Day: Selected and New Poems (University of Pittsburgh Press)
Raised in Woonsocket, Rhode Island, poet Denise Duhamel earned a BFA at Emerson College and an MFA at Sarah Lawrence College. Citing Dylan Thomas and Kathleen Spivack as early influences, Duhamel writes both free verse and fixed-form poems that fearlessly combine the political, sexual, and ephemeral. Introducing Duhamel for Smartish Pace, poet Karla Huston observed, “Her poems speak with a wild irreverence. [...] Duhamel experiments with form and subject, creating poetry that challenges the reader’s notion of what poetry should be. She presents what poetry could be as she fully engages pop culture, the joys and horrors of it, while maintaining the ability to poke fun at our foibles—and make us think.” In an interview for Pif magazine with Derek Alger, Duhamel stated, “At some point in my development as a writer, I became interested in putting it all in, trusting my leaps, embracing vulnerability in imagery.”

Duhamel has published numerous collections of poetry, including Kinky (Orchisis Press, 1997), Queen for a Day: Selected and New Poems (University of Pittsburgh Press, 2001), Two and Two (Pittsburgh, 2005), Ka-Ching! (Pittsburgh, 2009), and Blowout (Pittsburgh, 2013), which was a finalist for a National Books Critics Circle Award. Her most recent volumes are Second Story (Pittsburgh, 2021) and Scald (Pittsburgh, 2017). Duhamel has also collaborated with Maureen Seaton on four collections, including CAPRICE (Collaborations: Collected, Uncollected, and New) (Sibling Rivalry Press, 2015). With Julie Wade, Duhamel co-authored The Unrhymables: Collaborations in Prose (Noctuary Press, 2019). With Maureen Seaton and David Trinidad, she edited Saints of Hysteria: A Half-Century of Collaborative American Poetry (2007). Duhamel served as the guest editor of The Best American Poetry 2013. Duhamel’s honors include fellowships from the Guggenheim Foundation and the National Endowment for the Arts. Her work has featured on National Public Radio’s All Things Considered and Bill Moyers’s PBS poetry special Fooling with Words. She is a Distinguished University Professor in the MFA program at Florida International University in Miami. She lives in Hollywood.

Rocheleau: What was growing up like? Were you the smart kid or the smart-aleck kid? Or when did you evolve from one to the other? Duhamel: I was definitely the smart kid, but pretty shy. Though I loved jokes (my Aunt Shirley was a great joke teller), I was more of a listener. I had severe asthma and spent almost all of 4th grade in Crawford Children’s Hospital. I had always loved reading and drawing, but I mark my tenth year as the year I realized I wanted to be a writer. I befriended other kids with ailments who became the basis for my characters. In one such “novel,” the girl with cancer has magical, witchy powers because of her chemo treatments and casts spells turning our foul-tasting medicines into apple juice. In another, the boy with cystic fibrosis has a cape and, curing all our illnesses, leads us in an escape from the hospital. My one of a kind, self-published “books” were hand written on 3-hole lined paper, tied together with ribbons to form a spine, and decorated with my own cover art. The backs spouted fake blurbs with celebrities popular in 1971: This book changed my life! Mary Tyler Moore. Or Possibly the best book of the century. Mr. Rogers. Though I realize now that those blurbs were tongue-in-cheek, It wasn’t until I went to Emerson College that I became more of a smart-aleck. My classes were full of creative, loveable outcasts and I finally felt like I fit in the same way I fit in with my friends at the children’s hospital.

Rocheleau: Would you like more people to be able to actually pronounce “Woonsocket,” a highly musical and poetic word to both Native Americans and French Canadians? (And in actual usage, could it be any worse than Pawtucket?!) Do you ever find yourself explaining the “up North” experience? Duhamel: Both Woonsocket and Pawtucket roll off the tongue so easily for me that I forget sometimes how strange our town names really are. I have been in Florida now for twenty-one years, but I still find myself saying “idear” instead of idea or “ca” instead of “car” when I am talking to my relatives up north. Often when I say I am from Rhode Island, people in Florida think I mean Long Island. Sometimes I will sing Blossom Dearie’s “Rhode Island is Famous for You” to get my point across.

Rocheleau: What is life like for you in South Florida as opposed to New England, and how did each experience inform your poetry? Duhamel: Living in South Florida has been a dream for me! I came to teach at Florida International University as a one-semester Visiting Writer in 1999.

In 1998, Richard Touny and Lenny DellaRocca (the editor of the South Florida Poetry Journal) had invited me to read in the now defunct Hanah Kahn series. It was then I met Campbell McGrath whose work I’d greatly admired. When the opening came up to teach at FIU the next year, he invited me to apply. I loved the students. I loved being warm! As luck (mine and definitely Campbell’s!) would happen, Campbell won a MacArthur “genius” Award that semester and was going to be taking some serious time off of teaching and FIU needed a poet. I was in the right place at the right time and happily stayed on. My pediatrician had told my parents that living by the sea (which we couldn’t afford) would be very good for my asthma. I do remember them wrapping me up in a blanket and taking me to Scarborough Beach in fall—and my asthma indeed always calmed down by the ocean. One of the great benefits for me of living so close to the beach in Florida is that my asthma symptoms have been greatly reduced. I find both New England and Florida have influenced my work. Like you, I am French Canadian and grew up in a predominantly French Canadian town. So I was shocked to be living again among so many Canadians in Hollywood, FL. You can even get poutine here! Some of my Canadian snowbird neighbors call Hollywood “South Quebec” or “Southern Canada.” It’s like I have come full circle.

Rocheleau: Most of your poems have an easy delivery, prose-poem like, with interesting breaks and non-breaks. How do you think that came about? Duhamel: I didn’t realize there were any living poets until I went to college! I kid you not. Because we’d only read dead poets in high school, I had a sense that all poets were dead—that no one wrote poems anymore just as no one still made their own shoes. I had many years of writing vignettes or short stories until I learned poetic form. In my earliest published work, I felt comfortable in free verse and the prose poem, but sonnets were a struggle. I didn’t really feel comfortable using traditional/received forms until much later. I credit Maureen Seaton, my collaborator, in getting me to write in form. She felt completely at ease writing in form and made the process enjoyable.

Rocheleau: Humor is important in your work, whether at the core of a light poem, or as a veneer for a more serious one. What separates great humor in poetry from forced attempts at it with the focus on a funny line or a cute rhyme we see in so many amateur poems? Duhamel: Barbara Hamby and David Kirby (proud Floridians!) edited a terrific anthology * Seriously Funny: Poems about Love, Death, Religion, Art, Politics, Sex, and Everything Else.* The introduction to the book is one of the smartest defenses of humor as a way to engage a reader.
You don’t want poetry to give its readers a mindless chuckle, though I have no problem with mindless chuckles in jingles or sit-coms or dinner parties. Matthew Roher makes his point in “Serious Art That’s Funny,” writing, “Oppression cannot work alongside irony because it believes in its own righteousness and a monolithic concept of truth that must be asserted to the oppressed with a straight face. Irony and satire are the tools by which the oppressed get to make fun of the oppressors without the oppressors getting it.”

Rocheleau: Who are the humorists or comedians, in poetry specifically or in broader comedy performance who may have influenced your outlook along the way? Duhamel: In poetry, I was very drawn to Bill Knott, Albert Goldbarth, and Frank O’Hara. Denis Leary (yes, that one—but before he was a famous comedian) taught at Emerson College and gave students free passes to the comedy clubs where he was perfecting his act. Then we’d meet to talk about his routine—where he got the laughs, where the audience seemed to lose him, how far he could go with any given topic. We monitored the precise moments people were most engaged and the precise moments they started to groan or worse began to carry on private conversations and ignore Dennis Leary altogether. Watching the makings of a comic and comic timing was fascinating to me. It was amazing how fluid the crossover of techniques was from comedy to poetry, though it took me a few years to integrate what I’d learned. Now I am obsessed with Sarah Silverman, Chelsea Handler, and Kathy Griffin.

Rocheleau: You have published a book of poetic collaborations. What are the advantages and difficulties of the collaborative process? Duhamel: Maureen Seaton and I have published four volumes of poetry! And more recently I collaborated with the poet/creative nonfiction writer Julie Marie Wade on a book of essays. I absolutely love collaborating with the right people. While I might get lazy and not finish a solo poem on any given day when I am feeling blue or overwhelmed, I would never let down a collaborator by not providing the next line or passage. It’s crucial though that writers choose the right partners. Maureen and I put together a set of guidelines we call “The 10 Commandments of Collaboration:”

Rocheleau: Referring to one of your poems, do you actually finger the rosary in your head when you write in meter? Slightly more seriously, what has been your experience when writing in fixed forms and meter? Duhamel: As a fellow Catholic you might remember this saying—if the Catholic Church has you at five, they have you the rest of your life! I have loved writing in fixed forms and meter, first with Maureen, but now more frequently on my own. I've found that I've been able to surprise myself by condensing (for syllable counts) and coming up with oddball rhymes. Writing in form has been very useful when I'm stuck. I can lift lines from my notebooks of freewriting and see if I can take them anywhere through pantoums, sestinas, etc.

Rocheleau: The amazing Barbie poems, are they intended as direct effect and extension of a child’s imagination, or just the perfect ingenious vehicle for a cache of poems that contain adult commentary? Is there a balance there? Duhamel: I think it’s a bit of both, to tell you the truth! Carl Jung observed “the creation of something new is not accomplished by intellect but by the play instinct.” I think of writing poetry as seriously fun play.

Rocheleau: Well, let’s get down to it. Do you think Ken was mostly faithful to Barbie? When you played with them way back, did he have a Nabokov-like thing for Skipper? (By posing and answering this question, we have of course gone too far...) Duhamel: I honestly think Ken liked other Kens! “Magic Earring Ken” (1993) pretty much says it all. Ken tried his best to come out, but Mattel pulled this particular Ken from the shelves.

Rocheleau: The Poet Laureate process drags on. No doubt you’ve thought about what you might do in the post. Can you share? Duhamel: I would love to bring accessible poetry to as many elementary and secondary school students as possible. Reading poetry can offer solace and joy. Writing poetry can give students a chance to engage with language in so many unpredictable ways, to explore their identity/identities. Reading should be fun. Writing should be fun. Poetry should be relevant and readily available. I don’t want another generation to grow up thinking all poets are dead.

Rocheleau: You’ll be with us in October for your installation as an FSPA Chancellor along-side Virgil Suarez and Silvia Curbelo. In fact, it is possible that most or all our chancellors will be actively involved in that convention. Any last thoughts? Duhamel: I am a big fan of both Virgil’s and Silvia’s work and am honored to be installed alongside them!
NOAH AND JOAN

It’s not that I’m proud of the fact that twenty percent of Americans believe that Noah (of Noah’s Ark) was married to Joan of Arc. It’s true. I’ll admit it—Americans are pretty dumb and forgetful when it comes to history. And they’re notorious for interpreting the Bible to suit themselves.
You don’t have to tell me we can’t spell anymore—
Ark or Arc, it’s all the same to us.

But think about it, just a second, time-line aside,
 it’s not such an awful mistake. The real Noah’s Missis was never even given a name. She was sort of milquetoasty, a shadowy figure lugging sacks of oats up a plank.
I mean, Joan could have helped Noah build that ark in her sensible slacks and hiking boots. She was good with swords and, presumably, power tools. I think Noah and Joan might have been a good match, visionaries once mistaken for flood-phobic and heretic.

Never mind France wasn’t France yet—
all the continents probably blended together, one big mush. Those Bible days would have been good for Joan, those early times when premonitions were common, when animals popped up out of nowhere, when people were getting cured left and right. Instead of battles and prisons and iron cages, Joan could have cruised
the Mediterranean, wherever the flood waters took that ark.

And Noah would have felt more like Dr. Doolittle,
a supportive Joan saying, “Let’s not waste any time!
Hand over those boat blueprints, honey!”
All that sawing and hammering would have helped calm her nightmares of mean kings and crowns,
a nasty futuristic place called England.
She’d convince Noah to become vegetarian.
She’d live to be much older than 19, those parakeets
and antelope leaping about her like children.

DELTA FLIGHT 659

to Sean Penn

I’m writing this on a plane, Sean Penn,
with my black Pilot Razor ball point pen.
Ever since 9/11, I’m a nervous flyer. I leave my Pentium Processor in Florida so TSA can’t x-ray my stanzas, penetrate my persona. Maybe this should be in iambic pentameter, rather than this mock sestina, each line ending in a Penn variant. I convinced myself the ticket to Baghdad was too expensive.
I contemplated going as a human shield. I read, in open-mouthed shock, that your trip there was a $56,000 expenditure.
Is that true? I watched you on Larry King Live—his suspenders and tie, your open collar. You saw the war’s impending mess. My husband gambled on my penumbra of doubt. “So you station yourself at a food silo in Iraq. What happens to me if you get blown up?” He begged me to stay home, be his Penelope.

I sit alone in coach, but last night I sat with four poets, depending on one another as readers, in a Pittsburgh café. I tried to be your pen pal in 1987, not because of your pensive bad boy looks, but because of a poem you’d penned that appeared in an issue of Frank. I still see the poet in you, Sean Penn.

You probably think fans like me are your penance
for your popularity, your star bulging into a pentagon filled with witchy wanna-bes and penniless
poets who waddle towards your icy peninsula of glamour like so many menacing penguins.

But honest, I come in peace, Sean Penn, writing on my plane ride home. I want no part of your penthouse or the snowy slopes of your Aspen.
I won’t stalk you like the swirling grime cloud over Pig Pen.
I have no script or stupendous novel I want you to option. I even like your wife, Robin Wright Penn.

I only want to keep myself busy on this flight, to tell you of four pennyloafered poets in Pennsylvania
who, last night, chomping on primavera penne pasta, pondered poetry, celebrity, Iraq, the penitentiary of free speech. And how I reminded everyone that Sean Penn once wrote a poem. I peer out the window, caress my lucky pendant:

Look, Sean Penn, the clouds are drawn with charcoal pencils.
The sky is opening like a child’s first stab at penmanship.
The sun begins to ripen orange, then deepen.

HOW IT WILL END

We’re walking on the boardwalk
but stop when we see a lifeguard and his girlfriend fighting. We can’t hear what they’re saying, but it is as good as a movie. We sit on a bench to find out how it will end. I can tell by her body language he’s done something really bad. She stands at the bottom of the ramp that leads to his hut. He tries to walk halfway down to meet her, but she keeps signaling don’t come closer.
My husband says, “Boy, he’s sure in for it,”
and I say, “He deserves whatever’s coming to him.”
My husband thinks the lifeguard’s cheated, but I think she’s sick of him only working part time or maybe he forgot to put the rent in the mail.
The lifeguard tries to reach out and she holds her hand like Diana Ross
when she performed “Stop in the Name of Love.”
The red flag that slaps against his station means strong currents.
“She has to just get it out of her system,”
my husband laughs, but I’m not laughing.
I start to coach the girl to leave her no-good lifeguard,
but my husband predicts she’ll never leave.
I’m angry at him for seeing glee in their situation and say, “That’s your problem—you think every fight is funny. You never take her seriously,” and he says, “You never even give the guy a chance and you’re always nagging, so how can he tell the real issues from the nitpicking?”
and I say, “She doesn’t nitpick!” and he says, “Oh really?
Maybe he should start recording her tirades,” and I say
“Maybe he should help out more,” and he says
“Maybe she should be more supportive,” and I say
“Do you mean supportive or do you mean support him?”
and my husband says that he’s doing the best he can, that’s he’s a lifeguard for Christ’s sake, and I say that her job is much harder, that she’s a waitress who works nights carrying heavy trays and is hit on all the time by creepy tourists and he just sits there most days napping and listening to “Power 96” and then ooh
he gets to be the big hero blowing his whistle and running into the water to save beach bunnies who flatter him, and my husband says it’s not as though she’s Miss Innocence
and what about the way she flirts, giving free refills
when her boss isn’t looking or cutting extra-large pieces of pie to get bigger tips, oh no she wouldn’t do that because she’s a saint and he’s the devil, and I say, “I don’t know why you can’t just admit he’s a jerk,” and my husband says, “I don’t know why you can’t admit she’s a killjoy,” and then out of the blue the couple is making up.
The red flag flutters, then hangs limp.
She has her arms around his neck and is crying into his shoulder.
He whisks her up into his hut. We look around, but no one is watching us.

ON THE OCCASION OF TYPING MY FIRST EMAIL ON A BRAND NEW PHONE

When I sign “Denise,” autocorrect suggests Denise Richards
which makes my ex-husband Charlie Sheen,
which makes me a mother of three daughters,
and sometimes more, as I also volunteer to take care of the twins
Charlie fathered with his third wife Brooke Mueller
while she’s in rehab.
In my new identity, I’m ten years younger,
a lot skinnier, but I haven’t read much.
In my new identity, I get breast implants
so I can be in Wild Things for which I become pretty famous because of a sex scene with Neve Campbell in a pool.
But after that, my acting goes nowhere
except for bit parts and my now-cancelled reality show
It’s Complicated, which only runs for a year,
and for which Charlie calls me “greedy and vain."
Sure, I get to be in The World is Not Enough,
but Entertainment Weekly rates me
the worst Bond Girl of all time.
In my new identity, I still have a sister named Michelle.
I’m still French Canadian, raised Roman Catholic.
I still get to be a writer, but when I’m Denise Richards,
instead of poems, I publish a memoir
The Real Girl Next Door.
I’m a New York Times bestseller,
but deep down I know
it’s not because I wield a great sentence.
In my new identity, instead of overeating,
I get more plastic surgery and pose for Playboy
when my marriage heads south
and I no longer “feel sexy”
and just want to “prove something.”
In my new identity, my mother has passed,
but my father is still alive
going to The Millionaire Matchmaker to look for new love. Though I’m no genius, I’m generally respected because I don’t badmouth anyone,
even when I’m on Howard Stern.
I repeatedly decline to talk about the restraining order or any of Sheen’s public subsequent meltdowns.
What’s the point? Besides, I need to protect my kids.
There aren’t many famous Denise’s,
and I wonder why my phone, if it’s that “smart,” doesn’t suggest Levertov. When I erase Richards, autocorrect still doesn’t recognize who I am.
As I try to re-sign, Samsung asks
if I’m sure I’m just a plain old Denise.
Might I really mean “Denies”
or maybe “Demise?”

Maybe there is something in the water in Florida, or maybe great talent just seems to gravitate here. I don't know, but when I learned that for the second consecutive year a Florida poet won the NFSPS Blackberry Peach Prize for Poetry: Spoken and Heard, I thought I'd reach out to Gary Ketchum, this year's first place winner, and have a chat. I caught up with him on the phone from his home in New Port Richey. Like many, he is a transplant.

Gary grew up, far from orange groves and palm trees, in Michigan, and got his degree at Eastern Michigan University—swoop! I remember sitting next to him and his significant other, my friend Dina Tanner, at an FSPA convention. I found myself leaning in to hear that “Michigander” resonating timbre of his voice. He read a poem that he later entered with three others in this year’s Blackberry Peach contest.

I open-endedly ask him about poetry.

“I love interpretive reading of literature. I think that is how I fell for poetry.” He cited Homer and the other Greek poets for that oral tradition. When he reads poetry, Gary reads it out loud. “You get so much more out of poetry that way.” He considers himself a traditionalist when it comes to what he writes, and loves to perform, adding his own interpretation to each performance. He exudes a calm confidence that can only come from decades of experience.

Gary enjoyed a forty-year career with United Airlines, managing various aspects of that business. In 2013 he lost his wife, Pamela, of 20 years. He told me that poetry helped him work through his grief. “It just came.”
While in Chicago he found a poetry meet-up group and that led him to begin performing in open mic events. It was there he first joined a chapter of NFSPS. Eventually, Gary and Dina retired to New Port Richey and joined the New River Poets. Today, he is the Soon-To-Be-Installed President of that chapter. (A Covid-19 title I just made up — ha!)

Gary told me that he likes the challenge of form, especially the triolet and sestina forms, however he tends to write more free verse lately. His influences are mostly Twentieth Century poets: ee cummings, W. H. Auden, Robert Frost, and TS Eliott, but he notes Shakespeare’s sonnets, and well, many others.

So I had to ask if he had any advice for entering a spoken word contest. “Pick poetry that allows you to play with the sound of the words. One of my poems in this contest, “For Pete’s Sake” (an elegy to Pete Seeger), is an example of what I mean.” In another entry, Primal Sound, he personified himself as a drum — mimicking its sound.

Gary is tuned into the realities of today’s “tribes” and fearlessly writes political, sociologic and emotional poems—utilizing poetry as a commentary about feelings, life and all aspects of culture.

Yes. He says that he was thrilled to win. But I know, there was also a measure of confidence.

Here is a link to his winning submission, and the following pages are the four poems he submitted.

— Well done Gary Ketchum!
FOR PETE’S SAKE: Elegy for Citizen Seeger

Oh, he had a hammer
hammered in the morning, evening
he rang out freedom
sang out love between our brothers and our sisters aha
all over this land

Such a hammer was the music he wrote and performed
Master of the five-string banjo
he sang strummed songs
of protest prodding people
to march for human rights
we shall overcome
march against war
where have all the flowers gone
long time passing?

Yes, he had a hammer
his hammer had a sickle for a while he was communist with small “c” said he

but he loved his country
loved people
the common man and woman
the working stiff
the oppressed

fought for progressive change
and was blacklisted for his efforts
A weaver of songs
never stopped singing even quoting scripture
there is a season, turn, turn, turn

What a hammer
He urged us on to sing together
to come together
to overcome together
deep in our hearts, one day

Good night Irene
good night I blame Rest in peace, Pete
we’ll keep you in our dreams

~ Gary Ketchum
PRIMAL SOUND

I’m tight but when right neither drunk nor cheap
I can snare sound from tenor high to bass deep

I emanate audible waves of pressure
preternatural noise mimics a heartbeat
I am rhythmic root of existence
r-r-rata-ta r-r-rata-ta-tat

you cannot just hear me
you can feel me
absorbing booms beat your breast
genull you possess you

march with me
dance with me
chant with me
I’m your prehistoric percussive
message maker

whether pounding a parade’s pace
or driving a dirge of death
I denote destinies of human activities

boom-bah   boom-bah-boom-bah
boom-bah   boom-bah-boom-bah
boom-bah   boom-bah-boom-bah

I am primitive
I am compelling
I am the beat of life

Allison Wonderland

On the floor before a television, small child sat enrapt watching recording of Disney classic animated flick. “Whatcha watchin’, Allison?” I queried. “Allison Wonderland,” she retorted and quickly asserted, “She has my name!” No need to correct her mistaken notion of title role name as she clearly identified with the cartoon near-namesake.

Like her alter ego, Allison was sane protagonist in a mainly mad domain inhabited by strange creatures urging her hither and yon and to grow big or small or not at all, play croquet and beware the Jabberwock, my missy. Ersatz hatter once asked her to try broccoli disguised in cheese. “I don’t buy it,” said she.

Wonderland wandering, perchance to dream of drama and performance on the stage, star-struck, she felt stifled by powers that be: “Acting’s a tough gig once you have grown big,” they admonished, as if, “Off with her head!”

She, astonished, moved on, grew up, triumphed and dreamt new dreams fed by faith and promise.

Despite insane events the fates assailed, she fought and vanquished caterpillars and Cheshire cats, tweedle-dees and tweedle-dums, walruses and carpenters, red queens and mack turtles. She forged on and at last prevailed. Allison Wonderland, brave heroine nonpareil, emerged from rabbit hole whole, hopeful, strong, indomitable.

Linda Eve Diamond's poetry has received several honors, including an Artists Embassy International Dancing Poetry Grand Prize Award “for exceptional poetry that inspires dance and for furthering intercultural understanding and peace through the universal language of the arts.” The poem, Lost Gloves, was read, choreographed, costumed and performed at the annual Dancing Poetry Festival. Her poem, Notes, received a First Prize Award and was also read at the festival.

Linda Eve’s poetry has been published by numerous journals, anthologies and websites, including Bullets into Bells, Grey Sparrow Journal, The Ekphrastic Review, Encore: Prize Poems, High Shelf Press, Leaping Clear, Tuck Magazine, Poets Reading the News, The RavensPerch, and Your Daily Poem. Photographs by Linda Eve have also been recognized with awards and publication. Her photos have appeared in Cadence, Gravel, A Cloud a Day: 365 Skies from the Cloud Appreciation Society, and elsewhere, and she often pairs original photographs with her poetry.

For the poetry community, Linda Eve judged and now co-chairs Flagler County Art League’s Annual Poetry Competition, was FSPA webmaster and social media coordinator, and helped with initial setup of NFSPS’s Blackberry Peach Poetry Awards, which included formatting and co-editing the first anthology of award winners.

Linda Eve’s poetry books are The Human Experience (2007) and The Beauty of Listening (2013). Currently, she is working on several themed chapbooks. Visit her website at http://LindaEveDiamond.com to find her poetry, photography, and more.

"This is not an apple poem" was inspired by Magritte's "This is not an apple" painting, which shows an apple with the words: "Ceci n’est pas une pomme" (translation: "This is not an apple").

THIS IS NOT AN APPLE POEM

this is not the leaf of an apple . . .
or a book . .

this is not a . . .
this is not an poem, ripe and ready . . apple waxed poetic this is not a line that can define what may be true call it what you like and take a bite if you have a taste for a would-be-poem in an existential quandary shaped as a naturally artificial apple, but be careful not to break your teeth on the concrete, and any way you slice it, this is rich in fiber, is not red but may be read, is not real but not entirely unreal, is not still life or a slice of life, make of it what you will, open it to the core for a metaphor, dig out seeds for poet trees and juice the ink to make apple champagne, poetry in a glass, and perhaps then, when you’re sweetly relaxed, you’ll tell this not-an-apple, not-a-poem, what it was and if it tingled, even for a moment, or if it became some thing or another because you believed it

NOTES

I read somewhere that taking notes would gift me with more presence, more poems, more sensual being with ever-flowering fullness in each fleeting moment...

So I took notes to see more deeply, jotted notes on silences and sounds, exacting efforts to extract the most from each and every hour...

Scrawling notes for future poems, notes to fill the cracks and holes of aging memories and notes to show that I was there—or here...

Writing notes on sounds of laughter, notes on floorboards, notes on rafters, on colors unfolding in flowers and clouds, on being alone, on being in crowds...

Typing notes on the lines at the grocery store, scribbling, texting, journaling, indexing adding photos, captions, observations, ever noting on my notes notes notes...

Posting, scrolling, liking, sharing, making notes to anticipate the moment, capture the moment, recall the moment, then asking you for your notes as I missed another moment...

Missing moment after moment—as I focused on the notes...
I took notes of all kinds, took notes everywhere—even took notes from the air I don’t know how long this went on—before I heard a grieving silence—where once, there was music.

(I made a note about it.)

~ Linda Eve Diamond

“Notes” was honored with an Artists Embassy International Dancing Poetry First Prize Award and read at the 26th Annual Dancing Poetry Festival at the Palace of the Legion of Honor in San Francisco, CA.
You and Me

What, in the title, intrigued you?
Was it you, me, or the thought of us together?

I’m writing this on a Tuesday night in a time gone by for you now. I’ve wrapped myself inside these lines to be unfolded by your eyes.

The sky is turning misty now. Is it raining as you read?
I’m in a peaceful wooded study, but where are we now?

Don’t know what city we’re in, what day, time or year,
but I like it here with you.

As I lay myself down in these words, I imagine your caress sliding down the page as you undress each line with your eyes.

I hold a wisp of your attention as you hold shadows of my mind in this embrace so intimately spanning time and place.

This moment is ours so hold me gently, rest your mind
on this feathered bed of words I’ve made to share with you.

Slide between these pretty print sheets as you please.
I’ll be your lover under book covers, here for you always and ever at your page.

~ from “The Human Experience” by Linda Eve Diamond
POEM FOR RENT

Poems for rent — on stages, screens and pages — on a tear now and then as always, here and there — everywhere...

Step inside, look around, feel the space, sense the sounds as you and your shadow climb the heart pine spiral staircase.

Find secret rooms, hidden gardens — ever-moving views in skylight frames, the high arts of clouds and starlit myths.

Partially furnished — as you might imagine — a metaphor or two maybe a bit of fruit, a bite of truth, a warmth, a chill, a secret...

Nestle in this simple complex of worlds both private and shared. Even the smallest are spacious — sometimes ecstatically Rumi.

Poems for rent, for a bit of attention, a fare of the heart, desire for sparks of connection — slipped into small pockets of time.

Poems by
Linda Eve Diamond
To me, photography is a form of light poetry—creating poetic images with light. We frame photographs as we frame written poems, deciding on where to focus, the scope and depth of field, and what to leave to the imagination. We’re making structural choices, using the language of visions, colors, light, and hints of storytelling. Sometimes, for one reason or another, the words don’t come, but this is a poetic form that’s always inviting the light, getting things to start clicking, in one way or another.

“Most working poets are maybe 5% to 10% away from their ultimate potential: able to write uniformly fine work and to get published everywhere they deserve, and often. That’s what the Twelve Chairs course is for.” ~ Al Rocheleau

We are offering our Twelve Chairs Short Course on a free, one-month trial period, so you can experience the benefits of this powerful poetry course at your leisure.

The Short Course was derived from the scripts, recordings, and voluminous handouts of the 180-hour Advanced Course, distilling the copious instruction of that larger course into a sequential stream of short aphorisms and maxims, such as:

THE POET’S TRIANGLE CONSISTS OF: CRAFT, SCOPE, AND VOICE
WE ACQUIRE THEM IN SEQUENCE; EACH SUPPORTS EACH OBJECTS AND THEIR MOVEMENTS DRIVE YOUR POEM
A PERFECT OBJECT IS DEFINED BY THE CLEAREST WORD
THE OBJECT ITSELF CAN BE FOUND AT THE ROOT OF ITS WORD
MORE THAN ANYTHING, POETS AND POEMS SAY SOMETHING SENSE AND OBSERVATION MAKE QUESTIONS AND/OR ANSWERS THOUGHT OR EMOTION, SMALL OR GREAT, MAKES UP YOUR TAKE POEMS BUILD NOT WITH A SUBJECT, BUT WITH A TAKE

That’s just a taste of the Short Course; but are you intrigued? Now you can try the course out at home, free. FSPA is offering a one-month trial of the accredited Twelve Chairs Course on a flash-drive, compatible with any computer system. The drives contain the full Short Course along with all course handouts. After one month, if you are enjoying the course and its benefits, simply send in your $50 payment. If you are not happy with the course, you can return it. No obligation.

To obtain your free trial month, simply email Robyn Weinbaum at FSPATreasurer@Aol.com

FSPA CHAPTER NEWS & UPDATES

---
Miami Poets

Miami Poets continue to share poetry and friendship while sheltering in place during our new reality. More than ever, poetry is needed. Virtual Miami Poets Soirées, facilitated by Tere Starr, were held on the first Wednesday in May and June. We shared poetry, creative energy and inspiration by Zoom. On second Mondays, we joined Steve Liebowitz for virtual poetry critiques. In May, Tere Starr was a featured poet during the South Florida Writers Association’s virtual meeting. Miami Poets, Sheena Szuri, Steve Liebowitz, Lori Swick, Connie Goodman-Milone, Pat Milone, Ricki Dorn, and Mark Kraus shared their poems as well.

Achievements: Patsy Asuncion hosted a Zoom Open Mic from Charlottesville, Virginia. Her poems “Tollway” and “On the Other Line,” appear in voxpoetica. Zorina Frey was featured in Voyage MIA Magazine. Since the shut down, she performs her Spoken Word Poetry and Storytelling Time on Facebook. Sheena Szuri was a guest on Chuck Gregory’s #NewDream podcast where she spoke about truth in politics and democracy through the lens of poetic expression. Connie Goodman-Milone’s letter, “The Gift of Food,” was published in the Miami Herald. Her poem, “Haiku,” appears in The Author’s Voice along with Ricki Dorn’s poem, “He,” and Rita Morrissey’s poem, “Parrots.” Ricki’s poem, “Playground,” was awarded a first place for poetry in the South Florida Writers Association’s monthly writing contests. Swati Bagga received a second and third place for “Mistaken Identity” and “Religion.” In the category of memoir, Rita won first place for “A Case of Mistaken Identity” and Pat Milone received second place for “Mistaken Identity Crisis.” Even with a pandemic, poetry is our priority.

~ Tere Starr, President

When we meet:
The Miami Poets meet the first Wednesday each month from 1 to 3 pm during the Miami Poets Soirée at the Pinecrest Library, 5835 SW 111th Street, Pinecrest, FL.

Bring poems to read, yours or those by favorite poets. We often get philosophical, discuss what poetry means, now and through the ages. And best of all, we share how poetry enhances our lives. Anything goes so long as poetry is in the equation. Each soirée is an act of creation.

~ Tere Starr, President
The Live Poets Society of Daytona Beach

The Live Poets Society of Daytona Beach used to hold its workshop meetings on the third Wednesday of each month at the Daytona Beach Regional Library at City Island. Meetings went from 4:00 to 6:30 p.m., and the group welcomed all poets, and anybody interested in poetry, to attend. Now, of course, the chapter is ‘meeting’ on the computer, and relatively active since then with president Bob Blenheim doling out difficult challenges every week since the virus invaded our lives.

These challenges were heroically met via emails on the computer, and included writing poems on the following subjects: “What Makes Me Cry,” “Taking a Stand,” “I Can’t Breathe,” as well as writing a poem from the point of view of someone in the dark (after the chapter, “Cruise in the Dark” in Mark Twain’s travels through journey, A Tramp Abroad).

One notable achievement was that Llewellyn McKernan won First Place in the Maitland Library poetry contest with her poem, “The House Goes On Without Her.” And Ellen Nielsen has been hard at work on a cycle of poems that promises to be an amazing collection when completed.

All members are managing to keep busy, not only by writing poetry but also reading, listening to music, and watching movies. (And too much eating and too little sleeping. Gaining at least a modicum of weight has been an unfortunate result of the latter for some of them.)

It is hoped all of the Live Poets can survive intact until they can meet again at the Library when it is safe to come out of hiding.

~ Robert E. Blenheim, President

Poetry For the Love Of It

Our chapter recently conducted zoom meetings pending the opening of Tallahassee Senior Center. The chapter’s third anthology is under construction with a target date in August. Pat Stanford won two gold medals from the Florida Authors and Publishers Association for her book, Proverbs of My Seasons, Poetry of Transition. She took the Poetry Month Challenge by creating 30 plus poems, many of which will appear in Pandemic in Paradise, written by a librarian/author in Palm Beach County. Charles Hazelip’s fourth book of poetry, Good Things Good People Ponder, was published in May. Norma Plumley and her sister sewed and donated 600 masks to hospital, elder care, friends and family.

~ Charles Hazelip, President

When we meet:
The Live Poets Society of Daytona Beach holds its workshop meetings on the third Wednesday of each month at the Daytona Beach Regional Library at City Island. Meetings start at 4:00 pm and end at 6:30 pm and the group welcomes all poets, and anybody interested in poetry, to attend.
When we meet:
The Orlando Area Poets meet the third Thursday each month from 6:30 to 8:30 pm at the Maitland Public Library, 501 South Maitland Ave, Maitland, FL 32751.

Orlando Area Poets

The Maitland Public Library Poetry Month Coffeehouse and Contest was held via Zoom on May 29. Many of the Orlando Area Poets submitted their poems on the theme “Forgotten.” After those attending read their submissions to the group, the library announced the winners as follows:

First Place: Llewellyn McKernan, “The House Goes On Without Her”
Second Place: Sonja Jean Craig, “Forget About It”
Third Place: Lynn Schiffhorst, “So They Will Not Be Forgotten”

The Florida Writers Association Anthology Volume 12, Create an Illusion, has accepted the following pieces for the awards collection: Chris Flocken’s poem “Elusive Illusions,” Frank T. Masi’s short story “Gray Rider,” Elaine Person’s piece, “Don’t Refuse Your Muse,” and Lynn Schiffhorst’s poem “Soothing the Dark.”

The next theme assigned by the library is “Say Yes” for the coffeehouse on Friday, July 24 (date tentative).

The 10th Annual Florida Writers Conference will be held online beginning Friday, October 16, 2020. Information about the conference is available at floridawriters.net/conferences/2020conference/

Chris Flocken’s photograph, Sabino Canyon Sahuaro, was included in this year’s Sand Hill Review.

Alice R. Friedman’s haiku was published on Haikuniverse on May 23, 2020.

Peter Gordon’s poem, “You Can’t Quarantine Crime,” was poem of the week on The Five-Two, Poems on Crime site on April 27th. See (and hear) it at https://poemsoncrime.blogspot. Peter also had four poems published in this month’s edition of The Marjorie Kinnan Rawlings Journal of Florida Literature, published by UCF. These included “How Things Get Better,” “Kosher Salt,” “I Wrote This for an Old Girlfriend,” and “Hurricane Dorian Heads Toward Florida.” He also will have two poems in this year’s Sand Hill Review, “Belonging” and “Selling Your Soul.”

Diane Neff’s poem, “Disco Fever,” was published online in Claims and Issues and also in Claims and Bad Faith Law Blog, both on April 17, 2020.

Stan Sujka’s poem, “An Affair with a Rainbow” received an honorable mention from The October Project.

Elaine Person’s haiku was published online on The Five-Two, Poems on Crime, on December 9, 2019. Two of her photographs, “Cactus, (Sore Thumb), Oatman, Arizona” and “Stain of My Heart” were accepted in Beyond Words, a magazine based in Berlin, Germany for their May 2020 and June 2020 issue, respectively. Sand Hill Review from St. Leo University also took two of Elaine’s photographs: “My Hometown’s Great Falls, founded by Alexander Hamilton” (Paterson, NJ) and “Belonging in Church,” a photo of a basilica in Newark, NJ. Elaine is also on the faculty to lead writing workshops for the annual October 2020 FWA Conference online.

Shelley Stocksdale’s poem “Six Ways of Catching Fish in China” is grant-funded for autumn publication in Bamboo Ridge, A Journal of Hawai‘i Literature and Arts, plus will be reproduced with EBSCOhost, that offers databases of research and magazine texts.
New River Poets

New River Poets have elected, by online ballots, a new board of officers: President—Gary Ketchum, Vice President—Cheryl Van Beek. Susan Stahr—Secretary and Beverly Joyce—Treasurer will continue in the offices they have held for several years. New River Poets will be in good hands, but because of the pandemic, we have not yet had a formal installation of our new board. We look forward to having one when the world returns to normal.

Meanwhile, members are polishing up poems to submit to Cadence and the FSPA annual contests. We feel there might be a lot of competition this year, because others with time on their hands are doing the same.

Good luck to everyone...and continue to be safe!

~ Janet Watson, President Pro Tem

Sunshine Poets

Due to the COVID-19 restrictions, Sunshine Poets has not been able to meet. When we resume, meetings will be held at 10 am on the SECOND THURSDAY of the month at the Central Ridge Library in Beverly Hills. Members currently are working on entries for FSPA’s annual contest and are preparing submissions for FSPA’s annual anthology. Visit us on Facebook, and for more information contact: sunshinepoets@gmail.com

~ Cheri Herald, President

When we meet:
The New River Poets meet the third Saturday each month from 1 to 4 pm at The Old Schoolhouse at 8637 Richland School Rd., Zephyrhills, FL 33540.

When we meet:
The Sunshine Poets meet the second Thursday each month at 10 am at the Central Ridge Public Library, located at 425 W Roosevelt Blvd, Beverly Hills, FL 34465.
Big Bend Poets & Writers

Given the COVID-19 precautions we have not held our usual in-person meetings since February. At the time of this report we are uncertain about when we will be able to resume gathering in the same space or when we do, if all of our members will feel safe enough to join us. In a letter to our members, Gordon Magill wrote:

“To say we live in extraordinary times is an understatement. Most of the busy parts of our lives are still on hold, even our jobs, travel, going out, seeing friends, and we are forced to adapt in ways we hadn’t explored previously. It seems we are living through a crisis. Some definitions have crisis or the Greek krisis as meaning the turning point in a disease. The writer and poet Kathleen Norris has said that the Greek root of the word “crisis” is “to sift,” as in, to shake out the excesses and leave only what’s important.”

So what is the role of poetry, or writing for that matter, in a crisis? Especially in a crisis in which it is a challenge to separate truth and meaning from falsehoods and propaganda?

It seems to me that it is to encourage us to go inside, to ponder, examine, sift, shake out excess, and look for what’s important, for the small, or large, meanings in our lives. As isolated as we may think we are, we connect to the world through our introspection, reflection, and imagination. And so with our poetry and writing we re-enter “the family of things.”

Our new blog posts members’ poems on a weekly basis and our monthly newsletter has been transformed into what we call a Museletter, featuring the poetry and pondering of our members. We are thankful for the following contributing writers: Twanda Harrison-McBride, Mary L Burch, Jen Schomburg Kanke, Linda Whitefeather, Linda Marie, Katya Sabaroff Taylor, Katie Clark, Rebekka Brooks Istrail, Gordon Magill, Cynthia Portalatin, Stan Johnson, and Jan Godown Annino.

~ Linda Wright, Secretary for Gordon Magill, President

When we meet:
The Big Bend Poets & Writers meet the second Tuesday of every month from 6:30 pm to 8:30 pm in Barnes & Noble Bookstore, 2415 North Munroe Street, Tallahassee, FL 32303.
NORTH FLORIDA POETRY HUB

North Florida Poetry Hub (NFPH) was launched by Hope at Hand, a non-profit organization which provides poetry sessions for at-risk youth populations in Duval, Alachua and St. Johns Counties.

In April, JaxPoetryFest.org was held here in Jacksonville, sponsored by Steffani Fletcher, Executive Director of Hope at Hand, and President of North Florida Poetry Hub. This year, due to the COVID-19 crisis all live events had to be canceled, but the Hope at Hand team quickly came together to create online content for a virtual festival on the JaxPoetryFest YouTube channel. JaxPoetryFest consists of 17 recorded poetry workshops, documentaries, readings and performances by writers and poets. They pulled all this off as if it were an easy task, an amazing testament to their creativity, skill and adaptability. Kudos!

The end of April brought an opportunity to uplift the spirits of hardworking staff of Mayo Clinic and Hospital in Jacksonville, FL. A call for poetry submissions was advertised for uplifting, cheerful poems by the Ancient City Poets in St Augustine, who were spearheading the project with Mayo Clinic. NFPH forwarded 60 poems contributed by FSPA poets towards the project, which was coordinated by Ruth Van Alstine. A big thank you to the following contributing FSPA members: Big Bend Poets & Writers: Jan Godown Annino, Linda Marie McGill, Gordon McGill, Melanie Petrandis, Avis Simmonds; New River Poets: Andrea McBride, Cheryl Van Beek, Janet Watson; North Florida Poetry Hub: Sally Wahl Constain, Ruth Van Alstine; Orlando Area Poets: B.J. Alligood, Carlton Johnson; Tomoka Poets: Marc Davidson. A second big thank you goes out to hard working Hope at Hand teens who provided additional poetic words of encouragement for the healthcare frontline workers. Alone together!

On the membership side, we are excited to introduce Sally Wahl Constain of Ponte Vedra, an accomplished author and poet. Her background is that of an elementary school teacher and librarian in NYC for more than 30 years. She is a valued member of the local literary scene, holding the position of president of the Writers Group at Del Webb, Ponte Vedra, for the past three years, is a published author of several books to include The Keys to Fanny, a work of historical fiction, a poetry chapbook, Sometimes I Wonder, and her latest book released this past October, Random Reflections, an anthology of essays and poems. Welcome, Sally, to both FSPA and your new friends at North Florida Poetry Hub. We look forward to sharing words of poetry, fellowship and a long, mutually beneficial relationship.

Since mid-March due to the COVID-19 crisis, our regular meetings were cancelled until they could be safely resumed. Teleconferencing capabilities for NFPH members are being developed to bridge the gap with plans for virtual platforms to hold meetings and workshops. We are looking forward to welcoming back our friends in live meetings as restrictions are lifted but will have flexible options at the ready in our toolbox for future needs.

Tomoka Poets

Before COVID-19 put us all into isolation, Tomoka Poet and Volusia County Co-Poet Laureate David Axelrod was asked by the Daytona Beach Marching Band to write lyrics to their official march music. He performed with them in an event at the Daytona Beach Band Shell.

Mary-Ann Westbrook was again invited to read an original poem at the annual Freemanville Celebration. Freemanville is a tiny community in what is now Port Orange that was settled by freed slaves right after the Civil War. The only building still there is the Baptist Church which continues to hold services every Sunday and where the memorial celebration is held.

BJ Alligood participated in a celebration of Florida winners of the Blackberry Peach Poetry Contest sponsored by NFSPS and chaired by Joe Cavanaugh. BJ was the first place winner last year and picked up her prize at the National Convention in Santa Fe, New Mexico.

Our last open mic in Port Orange at Copperline Coffee and Cafe featured our favorite Canadian Poet Al Hubbs who was able to make it to Florida and to our open mic again this year to delight us with his latest works.

Everything else that Tomoka Poets were going to be involved in has been put on hold as we wait out this storm that has invaded our lives. In the meantime, we have some prolific poets who are writing and sending them out, back and forth and even critiquing. We will see you all when this tempest has passed.

Congratulations to Sonja Jean Craig for her 2nd place win in the Maitland Library Poetry contest. Mary-Ann Westbrook has had her poem A Poets Prayer illustrated and put to music by Sea Dog Studios and published on YouTube and Facebook.

Stay Safe. Stay Well!

~ Mary-Ann Westbrook, President

The Passage

When darkness falls
obscuring views
eyes raise upward
to a shining moon
Star’s stories told Sun crests new

~Mary-Ann Westbrook
I gaze upon your stillness pondering
(Sonnet 1)

I gaze upon your stillness pondering,
What secrets lie below your calm display?
Incessant question’s answers squandering,
Assuming promise of another day.
Eyes fixed on clear reflections undisturbed;
There stoic models pose without fatigue
Seem evermore serene and unperturbed,
But for the chevronel of ducks in league.
Spell broken finally, the winds join in;
Images ripple freely to-and-fro,
Without restraint the waves their work begin.
Revealing what may happen down below.
The turbulence calls upward precious gems
That in sunlight vie for His diadem.

~ Suzanne S. Austin-Hill
Forbidden Love

Lingering whispers of a distant night,
Still bring out the fear I saw in your eyes,
Haunting me even more so were your cries,
Each whimper and moan filled with curdled fright,
To a tall tower you were swept from light,
You were my partner in blasphemous lies,
Exposed by phony friends acting as spies,
You were still my lover until midnight,
In the dark, you escaped your heavy chains,
Seducing a guard to free your shackles,
Stabbing his heart, leaving nothing but stains,
When the King received word, he raised hackles,
Searching night and day if one breath remains,
I will find you through treacherous cackles.

~ Robert Stanhope

Ode to Abilify

Millions rely on you each day for peace of mind. Sweet, kind Abilify! You get me through the day with grace and finesse.
You’re the secret of my success.
Who knows what mayhem might ensue
if I did not depend on you-- tiny little white pill daily
you keep me on the safer side of sanity. Depression thwarted and on the darkest of days
I have my own private sun.
Feel so good! Soar like an eagle!
How can you possibly be legal?

~ Dennis Rhodes

Guarding the Castle

The miniature dragon sits atop his marigold kingdom, awaiting the arrival of insects smaller than himself.

His universe an exploded sun of perfectly uniformed petals. The flowering aroma an attractive dining table.

A welcoming dinner bell indeed.

Welcome to Carol Frost’s Alias City, which is, in the best sense of both words, the city of music…. But it is also a great city of the mind…. The hero of this book is a refugee, a survivor of World War II. She is now losing her memory, trying to recount what happened, giving us brief glimpses into the darkness known as history … and the healing known as the natural world, of pigeons, doves, and the comic, ridiculous humans. Herein, she remembers the flight, the terror, and the cities torn in two….

“Denise Duhamel’s Scald deploys that casual-Friday Duhamel diction so effortlessly a reader might think heck, I could write like that, but then the dazzling leaps and forms begin. . . Duhamel’s sentences don’t even break a sweat, sailing on with her trademark mix of irony, grrrl power, and low-key technical virtuosity, like if Frank O’Hara, Carrie Brownstein, and Elizabeth Bishop had a baby.” —Chicago Review
